

TCHS today

Our current shelter—hobbled, patched, repaired, stretched—houses as many as 140 animals, 30 caregivers, and dozens of people who come here to add to their families. All at one time! Crowded? Encumbered? Yes, very.

The small bathing and grooming room does double duty. It's also the only inside place for families to interact with animals outside their cage.

Shelter and medical care are nearly a city block apart. This presents a hardship for man and animal alike. Exams and surgeries are performed here.

Transportation between buildings? Shopping carts or employee vehicles.

Caring for more than 100 animals each day requires equipment to clean and launder.
We must now make-do
under quite restrictive conditions.

This is our current "Conference Room," but it must also serve as an office for two staff and has two volunteer workstations. It is also a copy center, space for orientation of volunteers, staff training, group tours, and sometimes even for pet intake and pet adoption.

TCHS in the not-too-distant future

Exterior of proposed shelter.

Pets and people will get to know each other in one of two "get acquainted" rooms before they go home.

We perform many spay and neuter surgeries, but animals also come to us in the full spectrum of physical conditions. Medical procedures are often needed with veterinarians volunteering services to supplement what our part time veterinarian can provide.

Procedures will be conducted in appropriately modern facilities.

Someday soon:

Cats will stay in a cat colony where visitors and adopters will also be able to meet and get to know them.

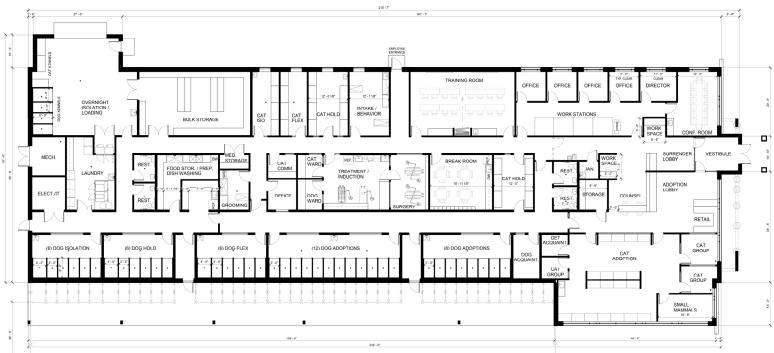

Dog kennels will be more comfortable with ready access to the outdoors.
